

How to benefit from 1:1 lessons

1. Choose the right teacher

Student-teacher's relationship is key when learning a language.

Here are a few questions you should keep in mind when you are meeting with a potential instructor.

2. Ask the right questions

- Is it a personality fit?
- Is the teacher fun?
- Is she knowledgeable about language and culture?
- Does she have teaching experience?
- Is she a native speaker?

What does native speaker mean?

- Someone who has spoken the language from an early age.
- Someone who has grown up in a multilingual and multicultural environment.
- Someone who has learned the language to a native-like level, can use the language in a variety of social situations, and who would be considered indistinguishable from native speakers.

3. Set small realistic goals

For example, break the level into manageable steps that you can reach weekly.

E.g. The present tense, the articles, etc.

4. Know your language style

For example, some students are visual learners while others need hands-on experience to master a new concept.

5. Set a schedule

To make real progress, you will need to put in work outside of designated lesson times.

It's better to practice a few minutes every day (ideally 30 minutes or more) than once a week for a few hours.

No matter what you choose, practicing is better than nothing.
